

As Head of Infectious Disease and Vaccine Discovery at Merck, Tarit Mukhopadhyay leads an exceptional team of scientists dedicated to advancing human health through the discovery of new vaccines, biologics, and small molecules against infectious disease, based in West Point, PA, USA.

Previously, he was Head of Vaccine and Biologics Process Development at Merck, based in the U.S., responsible for strategy on pipeline development, externalization, and innovation.

Formerly, Tarit Mukhopadhyay was a Professor of Vaccine Bioprocess Development at University College London specialization in High Throughput Development methodologies and technologies, specifically applied to vaccines.

He has past experience with bacterial and virus vaccines, including viral vectors for gene therapy applications and worked extensively with academia, industry, and funders, including the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, CEPI, and the UK Department of Health.

Tarit Mukhopadhyay is currently a member of the UK Vaccine Network.